What is your deepest, darkest fear? What makes you afraid to sleep with the lights off? Several readers were asked this very question and were asked to submit the ideas that most frightened them. These were then turned into stories featuring those readers. From a chilling case of a shadow man called Preacher Black, a road rage incident turned into something life threatening on a global scale to a tale of isolation like no other and a story in which every heartbeat could be the last, FAN FEARS, the fourth short story collection by Michael Bray, follows in the footsteps of Dark Corners, Forgotten Fears and Funhouse before it, and explores those things that make us most afraid and brings them to life on the page. Also includes four additional bonus stories and a foreword by extreme horror author, Matt Shaw
